This journal is dedicated to an academically sound approach to enquiry and exploration into change in organizations and social systems, and it seeks convergence of these and related disciplines to form a science of social communities. Since situations involving people are normally complex, this journal sees all human/social conditions and processes in terms of the complexity paradigm. The journal encompasses the social sciences, including organizational and management science, management systems/operational research and cybernetics, social psychology, sociology, anthropology, political science, psychohistory, as well as economics, law, mathematics, and matters relating to the information or knowledge society.
