Clinical Transplantation is a vital channel of communication, for all those involved in the care of people who require, or have had, organ or tissue transplants.

The Journal is published bi-monthly, with an international editorial board that includes specialists in all the major organ areas. It also covers the often controversial, social, ethical and psychological issues involved.

Interest is focused not only on the complete spectrum of present transplant operations, but also those that are experimental or may become possible in the future.

Clinical Transplantation is therefore essential reading for all those whose combined efforts will improve the prognosis of future transplant recipients.
