Pancreas

Rely on Ovid as the trusted solution that transforms research into results

Pancreas, the official journal of the American Pancreatic Association and the Japan Pancreas Society, provides a central forum for communication of original works involving both basic and clinical research on the exocrine and endocrine pancreas and their interrelationships and consequences in disease states.

This multidisciplinary, international journal covers the whole spectrum of basic sciences, etiology, prevention, pathophysiology, diagnosis, and surgical and medical management of pancreatic diseases, including cancer.

Features include:

- * Original articles covering new basic and clinical research
- * Case Reports
- * Letters to the Editor
