Using third party bibliographic software and Ovid

Ovid databases are complementary with third party bibliographic software such as EndNote, Reference Manager and ProCite. Users can export their search results from an Ovid session quickly and easily using the Direct Export feature.

Managing your Search Results

Once search results are retrieved from Ovid many users wish to save them in a managed way allowing reference to them at a later date. The key is to make this step quick and simple.

Setting up a Direct Export is Easy

Step 1:

Create a search strategy

Step 2:

From the result set, select the bibliographic records you wish to export by selecting the checkbox to the left of the record when you are viewing the title display or at the top of the bibliographic record when you are viewing the complete record.

Step 3:

Go to the Ovid Citation Manager

Step 4:

Make a selection from the "Citations" column, ex.) Selected Citations

Step 5:

From the Field column, ALWAYS select Complete Reference when also selecting "Direct Export".

Step 6:

From the Citation Format column, select Direct Export.

Step 7:

From the Action column, Select SAVE.

Note: Reference Manager, EndNote or ProCite do not need to be opened. They will start automatically, but do need to be installed on the same computer that Ovid is accessed from when using Direct Export.

The bibliographic software installed on your computer should pop up and prompt you for the library, i.e. file, you wish to import the results into. Once you exported your file from Ovid, to a bibliographic software package, close the bibliographic software, and you will be returned to Ovid.
